WE ARE GOING TO HIT 3500!

The Evening Division Office is a bustle of activity these days. So far 3300 students have registered for evening courses.

We asked Mr. Potvin a few questions about the increases.

First of all, there are 118 courses this year, 29 of which are being offered for the first time.

There are approximately 1800 students who are new to Loyola's Evening Division this fall. About 500 other students started their courses in the summer session and the other 1000 are from previous years. There are three reasons for this approximately 65% increase:- better advertising of courses available with special attention paid to personnel departments of large companies; good organization within the department, especially with regard to registration; and a keen desire on the part of the director, Mr. Potvin, and the assistant director, Mr. Chelini, to help any student who is interested in Loyola's evening division!

Have you heard? Every night at 5:45 P.M., CJAD's Dick Varney announces class cancellations for the evening divisions at LOYOLA COLLEGE, MACDONALD COLLEGE AND SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS University. Avoid an unnecessary trip - check your radio - dial 800, CJAD every night at 5:45.

EDITORIAL

The bookstore is to be congratulated for better organization and service this year. A quick survey on an ordinary night, one week after classes began, showed 8 assistants with 5 cash registers processing 40 students in 20 minutes. Two big factors in the improved situation are the new location - the cafeteria, which has more space - and the separate exits. This eliminates the pushing or shoving in the doorway - a major problem at the previous location. I am not saying there is nothing left to be done. Indeed, no. I had the misfortune to try my luck at lunch hour and found myself ducking soup and coffee while standing in the middle of the cafeteria. Perhaps some consideration should be given to making a separate entrance - one which does not run through the middle of the students' cafeteria.

To end on a cheerful note, though, there is one way to make the line move faster. Write the title, author, and course number for each book that you want. Have your cheque ready except for the amount and smile even if you have waited for two hours.

MEET YOUR PRESIDENT

The Very Rev. Patrick G. Malone, S.J., became the 13th Rector and 1st President of Loyola of Montreal in August 1959. Since that time, Loyola has grown from a small men's college of 850 students to a co-educational institution with a day time registration of 3500 and an evening enrolment of 3300. Father Malone was born in Belfast, Northern Ireland, in 1918. He received his early education in Toronto, entered the Society of Jesus at Guelph, Ontario in 1936 and was ordained in 1949 by James Cardinal MacGuigan in Toronto. Upon completion of studies leading to a licentiate in Philosophy, Father Malone completed a Masters degree in labor economics at the University of Toronto and later did additional graduate work in economics at Fordham University, New York City. His first contact with Loyola was in 1945 when he served for a year as an economics instructor before completing his licentiate in Sacred Theology at the Jesuit Seminary in Toronto and studying ascetical Theology at Namur, Belgium.

In an interview with A SAD NEWS reporter, Father Malone expressed some of his views on topics involving higher education.

COLLEGIALITY:-

Traditionally, schools accepted an inequality between teachers and students, teachers giving, students taking, and this concept carried into our universities. Today, the college is a community, a partnership of administration, faculty, and students. The student is an adult and bears some responsibility for his development - therefore, he should play his role in making the decisions of the college community. At Loyola, students and faculty are members of the Senate, serve on Senate committees and departmental committees - actively participating in decision-making.

CONTINUING EDUCATION:-

Continuing education takes on two aspects, the necessity to keep pace with the knowledge explosion in one's profession or vocation, and the increase in leisure time which allows people to develop their awareness and accomplishments. Loyola's role in continuing education is to provide degree programs for those who need or have time for it.

EVENING DIVISION:-

Loyola is anxious to offer a sound college program to as many students as possible with the existing resources. It is not a mill, grinding out degrees. Day and evening courses have the same quality and depth but differ in content because of the experience of evening students in many areas. Two new buildings will directly affect the evening students, an academic building and especially the Student Union Building.

CEGEPS:-

The two year post high school programme will eliminate the freshman year at university and accordingly enrolment will drop but only temporarily, as more people will continue their education into university.

LOYOLA'S FINANCIAL POSITION:-

Last year's grant from the provincial government was spent on capital expansion, chiefly the Bryan Building. A similar crisis could develop this year, however the matter is under "active consideration" by the Department of Education. Mr. Johnson's death may postpone that consideration.

A COMMENT FROM THE CHAOS

By Jay F. Simpson

For students, administrators, professors, and the student public, these are uneasy times. What probably started as a vague rumble of dissent, has become a cancerous growth, reaching into all aspects of student life. While the right of dissent is a cherished one within the Western hemisphere's democratic system, serious damage is being done daily as student dissatisfaction and unrest grow.

There is much truth and justification among the dissenters' claims; I would, however, question their methods and consequent results.

The damage done to the various centres of higher education, apart from the obvious turmoil and disruption, is taking on another face. The image of the student and the university is being smeared each time unrest and dissent emerges on any campus. The fact is that the non-student public are dumbfounded at student violence and demands. They shudder at the methods used by student leaders to rally followers to their cause, and wonder what is happening to the world. Can we blame them?

I believe that in this case, the end does not justify the means. There are rational methods which may be used to make one's voice heard in the darkness. Mass demonstrations and violence, while their results may be successful are the not the way for leaders of tomorrow or today to further their cause.

Students sneer at the present generation's futile attempts to preserve some degree of sanity in today's world yet are they any different in their struggles?

Look to your youth for the future, one and all. A thought to ponder.

Father Malone said he would like to see more time and imagination concentrated on the content and form of education. Commenting on his dual role as a priest and president, he said, "A priest always has another role, that of teacher or social worker, etc. The job of president is an impossible one with always more tasks than time. Being a priest does not make it easier". As for the future, I would like to teach again - but before I could teach, I would have to study - that's continuing education."
